

Excavation Competent Person & Hazard Recognition Training Class

OSHA Excavation Standards 1926.650-652

Wednesday, October 24, 2012

Purpose of this class :

To introduce the OSHA 1926.650 standard covering excavation work safety & competent person responsibilities. It will provide you with the training to recognize hazards associated with work in different types of excavations & trenching, & skills needed as a competent person in recognizing hazards associated with this type of work.

Topics covered: Safety Awareness—Hazard evaluation—Competent person definitions & responsibilities—Protection systems/General safety practices—Operational procedures—Evaluating soil classifications—Record keeping.

Every year about 400 U.S. workers die in trenches and 6,400 are seriously injured doing the work you do every day. Remember, soil is heavy and it can fall in at any time. If you are in a trench when a wall fails, you can be trapped very quickly. Being buried, however is only one risk at an excavation site: you must also be trained to recognize potential hazards like poisonous gases, falling objects and dangerous conditions. Knowing as much as you can about your working conditions can help you work safe.

What are the benefits?

1. Meets OSHA Requirements
2. Hazard Recognition
3. Safer Workplace
